
Skills for life

One of the schools we visited already had a specialist post-16 department, providing alternative study routes for young people with significant learning difficulties. Students transferred to this 'alternative sixth-form' from other mainstream and special schools in the area as one option when they reached the age of 16. 'Skills for life', focusing on learning that was directly relevant to adult life in the community, formed the basis for the curriculum provided.